LETTER FROM OUR BOARD LEADERSHIP

DEAR FRIENDS,

On behalf of the Board of Directors of Pittsburgh Opera, welcome back to the Benedum Center for the remainder of our 2018-19 season!

A century of audiences have been moved by the romantic and moving story of La bohème, and we know that you, too, will be. The five women who founded Pittsburgh Opera 80 years ago were loving stewards of this beautiful art form and today we are called to build on their example by making sure that Pittsburgh Opera will continue on the road to a successful future. Pittsburgh Opera engages audiences today in traditional ways as well as by expanding the repertoire through moving contemporary pieces, such as in our critically acclaimed, Second-Stage production, Glory Denied. Your financial support makes these experiences possible for audiences today and in the future.

The 80th Anniversary Campaign is how we will create that future. The Board of Directors of Pittsburgh Opera is 100% invested in this campaign financially and committed to the transformative impact it will have upon this company. We ask that you join with us, in addition to purchasing or renewing your subscriptions, and make an additional gift to Pittsburgh Opera. Become a member of the Annual Fund or increase your current level of support and know that you are a part of a living and growing art form that has culturally enriched our region for generations and will do so for many years to come.

Thank you in advance for your support!

LETTER FROM OUR GENERAL DIRECTOR

DEAR FRIENDS,

Welcome back to the Benedum Center! Thank you for joining us for one of the world’s most beloved operas, Puccini’s La bohème.

Whether you are seeing La bohème for the first time or the tenth, you’re in for a special treat. Nicole Cabell, winner of the BBC Cardiff Singer of the World Competition, makes her Pittsburgh Opera debut as Mimi. She is paired with Sean Panikkar as Rodolfo. They’ve earned rave reviews when they’ve performed these roles together, with the Cincinnati Enquirer praising the “lovely singing” of Cabell’s “big lyric soprano voice” and calling Panikkar “the perfect Rodolfo.” They are just two of the many talented, wonderful singers you will be enjoying today.

I am also very pleased to introduce an industry-first innovation this evening. These performances mark the public debut of exciting new functionality for Pittsburgh Opera’s free smartphone mobile app, developed by Instant Encore. Through it, you will be able to receive exclusive bonus content through your smartphone during the performance. If you brought headphones or Bluetooth headsets, you’ll even be able to listen to supplemental audio commentary in real time. These exciting features are intended to enhance your enjoyment of the performance. I encourage you to try it, and remind you to please be courteous of those around you while you do so.

While you are here today, please make sure to renew your subscription for our 2019-20 season. It will combine classics Don Giovanni, Carmen, and Norma with our first-ever Spanish language opera, Florencia en el Amazonas. Plus we’re including a Baroque masterpiece, Handel’s Alcina, and a satirical contemporary American work called The Last American Hammer. I encourage you to stop by one of the lobby tables to renew today, so that you can lock in your seats and pick up your Thank You Chocolates from our friends at Edward Marc Chocolatier. If you’re not a subscriber, now is the perfect time to sign up.

I look forward to seeing you here next month for our final opera of the season—Donizetti’s comic Don Pasquale, which will pay homage to the golden era of Hollywood in a production never seen before in Pittsburgh.

Warmest Regards,

CHRISTOPHER HAHN

SYNOPSIS

LA BOHÈME

ACT I.

In their Latin Quarter garret on Christmas Eve, the painter Marcello and poet Rodolfo try to keep warm by burning pages from Rodolfo’s latest drama. They are joined by their comrades—Colline, a young philosopher, and Schaunard, a musician who has landed a job and brings food, fuel, and funds (Legna! . . . Sigari!). While they celebrate their unexpected fortune, the landlord, Benoit, arrives to collect the rent. Plying the older man with wine, they urge him to tell of his flirtations, then throw him out in mock indignation. As the friends depart for a celebration at the nearby Café Momus, Rodolfo promises to join them soon, staying behind to finish writing an article. There’s another knock; a neighbor, Mimi, says her candle has gone out on the drafty stairs. Offering her wine when she feels faint, Rodolfo relights her candle and helps her to the door. Mimi realizes she has dropped her key, and as the two search for it, both candles are blown out. In the moonlight the poet takes the girl’s shivering hand (Che gelida manina “What a cold little hand”) telling her his dreams. She then recounts her solitary life (Sì, mi chiamano Mimì “Yes, they call me Mimi”), embroidering flowers and waiting for spring. Drawn to each other, Mimi and Rodolfo leave for the café (O soave fanciulla “Oh lovely girl”).

ACT II.

Amid shouts of street hawkers, Rodolfo buys Mimi a bonnet near the Café Momus and introduces her to his friends. They all sit and order supper. A toy vendor, Parpignol, passes by, besieged by children. Marcello’s former lover, Musetta, enters on the arm of the elderly, wealthy Alcindoro. Trying to regain the painter’s attention, she sings a waltz about her popularity (Quando me’n vo “When I walk out”). Complaining that her shoe pinches, Musetta sends Alcindoro to fetch a new pair, then falls into Marcello’s arms. The Bohemians leave Alcindoro to face the bill when he returns.

ACT III.
At dawn on the snowy outskirts of Paris, a Customs Officer admits farm women to the city. Musetta and revelers are heard inside a tavern. Soon Mimi walks by, searching for the place where the reunited Marcello and Musetta now live. When the painter emerges, she pours out her distress over Rodolfo’s incessant jealousy (Mimi! . . . Speravo di trovarvi qui). It is best they part, she says. Rodolfo, who has been asleep in the tavern, is heard, and Mimi hides; Marcello thinks she has left. The poet tells Marcello he wants to separate from his fickle sweetheart. Pressed further, he breaks down, saying Mimi is dying; her ill health can only worsen in the poverty they share. Overcome, Mimi stumbles forward to bid her lover farewell (Addio . . . D’onde lieta usci al tuo grido) as Marcello runs back into the tavern to investigate Musetta’s raucous laughter. While Mimi and Rodolfo recall their happiness, Musetta quarrels with Marcello (Dunque è proprio finite). The painter and his mistress part in fury, but Mimi and Rodolfo decide to stay together until spring.

ACT IV.
Some months later, Rodolfo and Marcello lament their loneliness in the garret (O Mimi, tu più non torni). Colline and Schaunard bring a meager meal. The four stage a dance, which turns into a mock fight. The merrymaking is ended when Musetta bursts in, saying Mimi is downstairs, too weak to climb up. As Rodolfo runs to her, Musetta tells how Mimi has begged to be taken to her lover to die. While Mimi is made comfortable, Marcello goes with Musetta to sell her earrings for medicine, and Colline leaves to pawn his cherished overcoat (Vecchia zimarra “Old coat”). Alone, Mimi and Rodolfo recall their first days together (Sono andati? “Have they gone?”), but she is seized with coughing. When the others return, Musetta gives Mimi a muff to warm her hands and prays for her life. Mimi dies quietly (Dorme? . . . Riposa), and when Schaunard discovers she is dead, Rodolfo runs to her side, calling her name.

“Bohemianism” has long been a fascination of Western culture. Perhaps this lifestyle represents an inner desire that we have to ‘color outside the lines’ and live a life unconcerned with societal pressures and capitalist ambitions, maybe it is an admiration that we have for fearless artists willing to devote their entire lives to their art and living authentically, or it could simply be our curiosity that draws us to the spectacle and spontaneity of these non-conformists.

The Bohemian movement arguably begins with Victor Hugo and the Romantic ideals that he championed in the artistic community following the French Revolution. Hugo and his followers were primarily young men from bourgeois families whose response to industrialization and the division of classes was one of disgust and protest. They often chose to leave behind the comforts that had been afforded them in order to become artists and writers whose work, either directly or indirectly, served as social commentary. Their existence was both in response to and in opposition of the bourgeois status quo.

One infamous story involves Hugo staging a coup at the premiere of his play Hernani. Hugo had long struggled with the censors in Paris prohibiting his works from being performed. In order to avoid his new play from being closed he assembled a large crowd, dubbed the “Romantic Army,” made up of very young and accomplished artists who arrived in the most absurd fashions and filled the theater entirely so that the play could not be shut down. These Romantics were locked inside the theatre and caused such a shock to society that the play continued to run for one-hundred performances and each performance with its own case of theatrics and scuffles among the audience. Hugo’s ‘Romantic Army’ would become the proto-type for the ‘Bohemian.’

This same passionate idealism is what binds together the four friends of Puccini’s drama. Whatever their background, they now live together in what Rodolfo describes as “povertà lieta” or ‘happy poverty.’ For them poverty is an ideal that they ascribe to, along with pleasure, beauty, and love. Though they can’t seem to pay their rent, they always find a way to enjoy the pleasures of life.

For me, Bohème is a ‘coming of age’ story for these young men who are in that beautiful time of life when they have no fear. Each with his own artistic pursuit and no concern for what tomorrow might hold, they celebrate life in every moment and improvise their way through any obstacle. They represent all that we cherish about our own memories of youth: hope, passion, endless possibility.

It is only when they are confronted with the true tragedy of poverty that their eyes are opened, and these young men are irrevocably changed. Mimi, their neighbor, who lives alone and is struggling to survive, becomes a dramatic foil to these four friends. We learn in Mimi’s Act 1 aria, one of my favorite moments in this opera, that she finds her greatest hope in the anticipation of the spring’s first sunrise. This feels like a metaphor for a happier, brighter future filled with health and new beginnings. The contrast is drawn as the Bohemian friends’ hope of social reform pales in comparison to Mimi’s simple hope for survival.

Both she and the other female character in this story, Musetta, face a harsh reality that affords them few opportunities. Their tenacity, though reflected differently in each woman, demonstrates the disparity of their socio-economic background. The story of Bohème perhaps offers us all the opportunity to examine our own blind spots for the challenges presented to those from different backgrounds.

"Once you hear the opera, it’s forever in your soul.”

Sound waves inspired by the aria “Quando me’n vo” from the opera La bohème.

EVERYONE should experience this.

Please give to make that possible.
